The Last Spanish Secret Mr Chris Wright

This is the true story of an Englishman's affection what is surely the last hidden corner of Spain; the Maestrazgo (pronounced-strath-go) of Aragon. A wild and mountainous land of immense space it is now the most depopulated region in Western Europe, each inhabitant having the equivalent of five hundred football pitches of space to move around in! Many of the captivating villages remain today as they were hundreds of years ago and by their very isolation their hospitality towards visitors is nothing short of wonderful. At this present time there is a movement towards a new era of tourism for people who favour outdoor activities. For walkers, ramblers or mountain bikers there are over eighty different routes available, varying from a few hours to days. Other activities include rock climbing, kayaking, fishing, caving, or just relaxing and absorbing the atmosphere of the real Spain. As for accommodation and food it is like returning to what we knew many years ago; generous helpings of country fare, where nothing is too much trouble for the guest. Fresh eggs, bacon, lamb, pork and beef, all of which have a distinctive flavour as the animals have fed on natural grazing land rich with thyme, rosemary and sage. It is all here just waiting to be discovered.
