Tin-Can Projects and Art-Metal Work, 1936 Joseph J. Lukowitz

The great value of this book is less in the specific projects than in the techniques used to make them. When it was written in the 1930s, unemployment was at an all-time high and money was scarce. Self-sufficiency was not only desirable but necessary, so people made things they could not afford to buy. In today's world, many people do not know how to make anything in a home shop. This book is a manual of sheet-metal working, not only showing how to make many things but also how to make the simple jigs needed for basic work. Whatever you might want to make from sheet metal, whether or not the plans are here, the techniques are.
