Not illustrated. 1792 edition. Excerpt: ...of them might not perhaps be disputed; but a distinction ought to be made between those parts of America and others in far different circumstances. If authors profess to write as philosophers they should seek for information from the purest sources, and not content themselves with the accounts of Robertson's History of America, Vol. II. p. 17.-Kinds' thoughts on Emigration to America, political Miscellany, 1783. p. 261. They content themselves with theorising on subjects, which can be determined only by fact and observation; or with forming general conclusions from partial reports. If they, write as politicians, their aim may indeed be answered by stating facts in a delusive light; and by representing America as a grave to Europeans, they may throw discouragement on emigration to this country. It is at the same time amusing to observe the inconsistent conclusions of these theorising philosophers; for whilst one condemns the air of woodland as destructive to life and health, another celebrates it as containing nutritive particles, and asserts that men who live in the woods consume less food than those who dwell in open countries. But notwithstanding the dreams of European philosophers, or the interested views of European politicians, America can best be described by those who have for a long time resided in it. Those who have not seen it at all, and those who have passed through it with the rapidity of a traveller, can be very inadequate judges; yet unhappily there are many of both these classes of writers, whose accounts have gained more credit than they deserve. In that part of America which it falls to my lot to describe, an 'uncleared and uncultivated soil' is so far from being an object of dread, that...!'. Attributed to Raynal. History of the Indies. Vol. II. p. 278. It is that there...
