Hazardous Materials Training - First Responder Operations: Student Guide 2005 Edition

Hazardous Materials Training - First Responder Operations: Student Guide 2005 Edition

The IAFF developed this course for those fire, rescue, Emergency Medical Services (EMS) personnel, and other First Responders who may respond to incidents involving Hazardous Materials (HazMat) or Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMID). The role of the First Responder is changing, along with the hazards and risks inherent in calls that once were considered "common alarms". This course will focus on enabling students to:

- 1) protect their health and safety before, during, and after responding to potential or actual HazMat/WMD incidents.
- 2) acquire the knowledge and skills needed to recognize and identify the clues that determine the presence of HazMat/WMD.
- 3) learn how to research and evaluate technical information.
- 4) practice making decisions and executing First Responder actions.

This course articulates a decision-making process, relating how to think along with what to do and not do. Contents include Understanding Hazardous Materials, including the chemical and physical properties and health and safety threats; Recognizing Hazardous Materials, including clues for recognizing hazardous materials and identification placards, labels and markings; and, Responding to Hazardous Materials, including Pre-incident planning and APIE process applied to first responder actions.
