Our daily work - whatever our job is - gets the largest single block of our lives. But time on the job is for too many of us time at the rat race - with the rats winning. Is this "it"? I used to think so, but one day two things dawned on me together: 1) if life is to have a meaning, I would have to find it, not hope to create it for myself; and, 2) living must get its meaning, first of all, on the job because that's the drain down which the best hours of every week dribble away. I write this little booklet so you can share, if you want to, in the discovery that it is daily work, whatever your job, that gives meaning to life, not because you will now decide to put meaning there but because God has already done so. Come see.
